The KWC ONO highflex™ is now offered in stainless steel

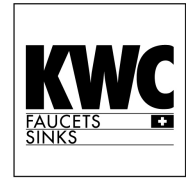

The popular KWC AMERICA faucet satisfies a wider array of design needs

NORCROSS, Ga. (April 2009) – A showpiece of cutting-edge design, the internationally awarded KWC ONO highflex™ couples superior functionality and stylish visual appeal. With a nod to modernization, the performance-oriented faucet is now available in a handsome stainless steel finish, designed to satisfy a greater range of personal style preferences.

The versatile KWC ONO highflex™ effectively combines simple, classic design with a professional pull-out spray head that permits unprecedented agility.

A perfect companion for the frequently-used kitchen, the convenient pull-out spray on the KWC ONO highflex™ is easily operated and immediately returns to its original position after use. The ergonomic spray and flat spout can swivel 360 degrees, facilitating a wide range of activities at the sink.

With its two-stage operating system, the wear-resistant, flat-topped spout produces a low-pressure stream that automatically switches to a more powerful stream for extra cleaning power. When the spray lever is pressed down completely, it operates in the pressurized spray position.

The pioneering movement system of the KWC ONO highflex™ keeps dirt-traps to a minimum, allowing the water stream to flow accurately. Clean-up with a microfiber cloth is quick and easy, thanks to the smooth surface of the spring-loaded hose. And any dirt or limescale can be washed away with the removal of the flush-fitting Neoperl® Caché®.

In addition to the new stainless steel finish, the KWC ONO highflex™ is also offered in chrome-plated brass, with an optional hand spray bracket.
